Orange Peel Plastics

A fascinating article on using the tons of orange peel from the orange juice industry to extract a new component for making plastics. Thankfully limonene is colourless so we won’t be restricted to just orange coloured food containers in the future.

Source: From The Conversation Orange is the new black gold: how peel could replace crude oil in plastics